

State Data Factsheets

The state factsheets were compiled using data reported by postsecondary institutions to the Federal Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System (IPEDS). The public institutions included in these state analyses—and in the “institution count” metric—are listed below. Public institutions that did not report data for FTE student enrollment, instructional expenditures, and completions in both 2002 and 2006 were excluded from the state analyses; all private institutions are also excluded. Within states, the institutions are organized according to broad Carnegie 2000 classifications, thus grouping together schools with similar degree-granting status.

Freestanding medical schools (such as the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey) are not included in the state factsheets because their funding and cost structures are not representative of the majority of institutions in the public sector. However, institutions that include medical programs (such as the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill) are incorporated in the state factsheet data because the medical program data are not reported separately from the institutional data. If the institution reports expenses for the medical schools separately from the main campus (and some do), they have also been excluded from the analysis. The institutions that do include medical programs are denoted by a ¹ in the list below.

Wherever possible, data for institutions that report information together, typically branch campuses, have been separated according to allocation factors provided by IPEDS or by other allocation methods. Institutions that have had any enrollment, financial, or completion data allocated in either 2002 or 2006 are indicated by a ² in the list below.

Some institutions have been identified as extreme outliers in the national data and thus been excluded from the national and state averages presented in the factsheets. However, a limited number of the institutions that have been removed from the national average data have been included in the state level information if their data are consistent over time. Institutions that have been excluded from the national averages but are included in the state averages are indicated by a ³ in the list below.
